

INVESTMENT POLICY OF THE FUND

MARKET SUMMARY

Last month's economic data suggests that the US and the EU economies are diverging further. The US economy stays robust, with upward revisions of economic growth and strong job creation reported in recent months. Contrary, the Eurozone has encountered unexpected economic activity slowdowns, with weaker growth signals emerging from different sectors. Overall inflation slows down across Atlantic, while core inflation has shown signs of stickiness, indicating underlying pressures that continue to bother both economies. In the recent weeks, global financial markets responded to the volatile economic environment and central bank actions. In the US, relatively strong labour market and optimistic corporate earnings expectations have supported positive investor sentiment, resulting in a strong performance for the stock market. Expectations of further interest rate cuts by the Fed is also contributing to a favourable environment for equities. On the other hand, the Eurozone has experienced mixed market moves, where the ECB's monetary easing has provided some support, but economic uncertainty has toned down market sentiment. In China, recent economic stimulus measures fuelled a rally in equities, even though apprehension about the sustainability of growth remain amid structural problems. In fixed income markets, expectations of further rate cuts have initially led to a decrease in US bond yields, but more recent strong labour market data caused a meaningful uptick of the entire curve. At the same time EGBs yields moved slightly lower, showing some decoupling from the US movements due to the region's distinct economic challenges. We did not make significant changes in the fund's composition, remained positioned constructive on European green bonds. The new US administrations tariff policy might affect the EU economy negatively which is expected to support the region's bond markets.
