

INVESTMENT POLICY OF THE FUND

MARKET SUMMARY

In February, Hungarian inflation may have slowed slightly according to market expectations, but most analysts believe that the inflation trajectory expected for this year has significantly shifted upward. The government has already expressed its concerns about high food prices, and if no favorable movement is observed in the coming weeks, some form of price caps may be reintroduced. Besides food prices, the price increases of many market services are also accelerating, with similar measures being considered to address these issues. At its February rate-setting meeting, the Monetary Council did not change the policy rate, leaving the base rate at 6.5%. The central bank's communication remained hawkish, making it unlikely that the rate-cutting cycle will resume in the near future. However, a clearer picture will only emerge following the change of the central bank governor in March. During the month, short-term yields rose slightly.

Throughout the month, Hungarian yields were significantly influenced by both domestic developments—such as much higher-than-expected inflation data and fiscal easing—and international factors, including trade war concerns, U.S. growth data, Ukrainian peace talks, and European defense budget updates. As a result, volatility remained present, albeit at a somewhat lower level compared to January.

During the month, we adopted a more constructive stance but maintained a cautious, primarily tactical positioning, given the uncertain international environment and risks pointing toward a higher yield regime.
