low yields. Many market practitioner's have expected worsening conditions on the bond markets at the emerging so at the developed region, as the high level of public debts could have increased the pressure in supply. Our country was exception from this, at the outset. The increasing demand of foreign investor has overcame this problem in Poland, that is why this factor did not let to feel it's influence. Although the Checz market lagged behind in January, but it rebounded in February, because the investors believe, that the Checz emission will mainly focus on foreign exchange denominated securities. Raise of base rates does not seem to be a threat in case of the "Visegrad" countries in this year any more. Although our Greek bond exposure generated profit on coupons, profit on prices could not be achieved, because the end of the Greek crisis can not be predicted. We expect early resolution of the situation and foresee bright future for the regional bond markets on the short term, as the base rates could remain low and market tension might start easing.
