MARKET SUMMARY:

Investors fled equity markets in August as revived recession fears as well as a US downgrade proved to be the perfect storm which wiped out 1.5 year worth of equity market appreciation. Equities plunged across the board with several major indexes suffering the largest one-month point drops ever. Investors unloaded cyclicals the most amid the panic selling, however, related commodities (e.g. Copper, Coal or Brent crude) suffered less steeper losses, which indicates some kind of forced equity selling after a period of excess liquidity and risk appetite. Equity valuations improved during the meltdown as the market already priced in substantial earnings deterioration, according to our calculations. We were buyers in selective names and increased our equity weight amid the selloff.
