MARKET SUMMARY:

Core market yield movements were hectic in August. Early August, the president of the ECB assured markets they would do everything to save the euro which led to less risk aversion and higher Bund yields. This and the stabilising macro data was sufficient for the market to price out further QE by the Fed, so Treasury yields also headed north. In the second part of the month this move was reversed: after some weak economic figures the head of the Fed gave hints of further bond buying so core yields almost came back to early August levels.
