MARKET SUMMARY:

Credit markets closed a good month as US data surprised on the upside and European data came in disappointing. First half of the month brought strong performance which was followed by diminishing market momentum later. Significant monetary/economic events and announcements did not arrive, market movements were mostly generated by incoming data. The naked CDS ban on EU sovereigns valid from 1 November could have acted as a supporting technical factor as investors closed open positions, bringing CDS and bond yields down. Hungarian CDS also decreased significantly despite any good news about IMF negotiations. We are not willing to add risk, we try to take profit on some outperforming positions and reinvest the money with preserving the book yield of the portfolio.
