MARKET SUMMARY:

Equity markets were mixed in November. US indices ended the month flat after meaningful volatility, Europe and Japan closed in the green, while emerging market finished lower. The trend of stronger dollar and weaker euro, which started in mid-October, continued during the month. The commodity selloff restarted in November, all major groups incurred losses in the period. It was the potential rundown on US storage capacity which pulled oil lower, while copper prices fell on weak China demand and stronger-than-expected supply outlook for 2016.

The fund closed most of its positions in early part of the month, and kept some Hungarian and other emerging market equity exposure for the rest of the period. Currency exposure was tilted towards dollar against the euro, and the fund was slightly short copper and gold. The fund underperformed its benchmark in November.
