MARKET SUMMARY:

June will go down in history as the month of the Brexit-vote, but markets only started to trade on the event approximately a week before the day of the vote. This period lifted equity prices and most risky assets, but government bond yields stayed low, somewhat contradicting the stock market's optimism. Just like the volatile but trendless equities, neither currencies, nor corporate bonds, nor commodities showed meaningful trends except for gold which followed through its previous advance.

The fund increased its equity shorts in the middle of the month, lengthened its duration by adding some more US long bond exposure and shifted to fx exposure more towards the US dollar. Gold miners ETF was also added, just like short USDGBP, the latter being closed after the vote's result was published.
