MARKET SUMMARY:

Polish government bonds had a very strong month in March: yields came down by 15-40 bps, that coupled with a significant flattening of the yield curve. Investors' risk perceptions changed significantly: political risks, which led to an extreme increase in risk premia last year, were fading from investors' attention. It was partly surprising, because the main concerns are unlikely to be resolved soon. Still regional valuation of Polish government bond improved a lot in the last periods, good local support (demand from banks due to the bank tax) is expected. In addition, the budget deficit is more likely to remain below the 3% threshold of GDP this year (which was important for the flattening) and economy is running relatively well, however high frequency data was a bit worse than expected, which strengthened the view of stable rates for this year in Poland. Moreover, international environment was very supportive too: yields of the 10Y German and USD bonds came down by approximately 20bps. General theme of the month was, whether global reflation trade is done, overdone, or can it further to go.
