MARKET SUMMARY:

Polish GDP accelerated from 4% to 4,7% YoY, beating market consensus (4,5%). Moreover, inflation in Poland hit 2,5% YoY in November (official inflation target of NBP), beating market consensus (2,3%). The jump may come from higher fuel and food prices. The general expectation is that inflation is only temporary higher and will decline in coming months. However, because of the unexpected increase in prices, short end and especially the belly bonds performed poorly and not only erased all of the gains of November, but ended the month higher in terms of YTM.

Meanwhile the Ministry of Finance announced the the Polish budget was still in surplus after October. Main reasons: VAT revenues skyrocketed (22% YoY), subsidies from budget to the social security system fell (-19% YoY) as well as the debt servicing cost (-10% YoY). Due to high growth, steep yield curve, better budget deficit long term government bonds outperformed this month significantly and were less affected by surprise in CPI.

Although the pressure to begin monetary tightening will be rising with CPI hitting target (at least temporarily) and as labour market keeps tightening, we expect that the Polish MPC will stick to the relatively dovish rhetoric at least for the coming months.
