MARKET SUMMARY:

During December the Monetary Policy Council left the base rate unchanged, as expected. However, the Council lowered the interest rate paid on mandatory reserves from 1,35% to 0,5% (which was the official deposit rate). There will be a fiscal impact: the profit of the NBP will be higher by appr. 350mln PLN and lower the banking sector's profit by the same amount. The Chairman was very dovish downplaying wage pressures, highlighting uncertainty regarding growth and the possibility of renewed deflationary tendencies worldwide and reiterated his call for unchanged rates throughout 2018. Until the base effect in inflation provide a lower headline number, we do not expect that this rhetoric will change.

Looking ahead inflation is set to fall on the back of before mentioned base effects in the next months, which could provide a support for the short end and belly (supported by the dovish central bank). In November high frequency macro data was strong, signalling a GDP growth by appr. 4,7-5% in Q4. The strong performance of the economy, tightening labor market, widening output gap will not provide a strong support for bonds in the long run, however relative fiscal performance was quite impressive in 2017.
