MARKET SUMMARY:

In January local developments played a minor role, core markets shaped the POLGB market. Based on the macro backdrop, changes in global monetary policy, economic cycle, strong oil price action, tight labour market the end of the bull market regarding bonds was the consensus expectation for this year. In line with the expectations core market yields started to sell-off even after dovish remarks by the Ecb and BoJ. Fed officials looked a bit more confident regarding inflation and the outlook of the economy. After the statement, probability of 4 hikes in the US this year increased, and the level of the terminal rate may be questioned over time. In Europe Draghi was quite dovish, mentioning the uncertainties around the common currency and emphasizing, that the low level of interest rates will stay for a prolonged period of time even after end of QE. In Japan Kuroda was quite dovish too, forecast were unchanged and the 0% target for 10Y papers was strengthened by unlimited fix price tender, which was not used, but fulfilled its purpose: yields were little changed in Japan. However, global bond sell-off continued: 10Y US bond yields increased by ~40bps, 10Y German yields increased by 30bps. Polish government bonds were quite resilient due to the attractive fiscal situation and strong macro fundamentals, however the 5Y segment increased by 30bps, the 10Y segment by 40 bps from the lowest levels seen in January.
