MARKET SUMMARY

At the beginning of February, investors were mostly concerned about how much and at what pace the US Federal Reserve would raise interest rates in 2022, but unfortunately this has been overshadowed by events in Ukraine. The odds of a rate hike have dropped significantly since the outbreak of the war, but even now we can be sure that the Fed will start the rate hike cycle. However, the armed conflict between Russia and Ukraine has completely changed the investment world. Commodity prices have risen significantly in recent weeks, and not only the price of gold or oil, but also the price of wheat is close to all-time highs. So while the economy continues to slow down, inflation is at a 40-year high. Slowing economic activity in a rising inflationary environment is unfavorable for risk assets. Almost nothing other than commodity-linked sectors are performing well in a stagflationary environment, and this poses a serious challenge for economic agents. The Hungarian National Bank continued to raise interest rates in February in response to the high inflation numbers. The EURHUF exchange rate was stable until the outbreak of the Russian-Ukrainian war, but by the end of the month the forint had fallen to a new all-time low against the euro and the dollar.

The fund kept Ukrainian soveriegn bonds on overweight in February and kept Russian sovereign bonds on neutral. The fund's duration was aligned to the long term average level. The fund invests into the EM European hard currency bonds, of which 35% consist of Ukrainian and Russian government bonds. After the war errupted, these bonds quickly started pricing in a default event and lost the bulk of their value. Unfortuntely not only these bonds were impacted but the whole region got under severe selling pressure. The losses for the region are way surpass the one seen during the '07-'08 financial crises.
